Historical Notes: An 800-acre working ranch called Round Mountain, located near Ukiah, California, was purchased by a group of back-to-the-landers in 1978. The community that was established was economically based on agriculture and cottage industries; members were involved in progressive social and environmental causes. The community, which reached about 20 adult members, had the kinds of conflicts with local governmental bodies over zoning that afflicted many communes in that era. Eventually the land was sold to a single owner, but by then it had several dwellings and continued as an informal community with some shared facilities, including bathrooms, kitchens, and an organic garden. Sources: Miller, Timothy. The encyclopedic guide to American intentional communities. 2nd ed.
