

Eagle Access Card offers convenience and security

The traditional USI identification card is being replaced by a multi-purpose debit card called the Eagle Access Card that will include a photo of the owner. The card will be used for the same purposes as the previous identification card - University identification, discounts, and Rice Library privileges-with an addition of magnetic stripes that will allow access to other services.

The Eagle Access Card will enable USI employees to deposit a maximum of $25 in an EagleBucks account and use the card instead of cash at campus copy and vending machines. Copiers and vending machines are being equipped with readers to process debit transactions.

Deposits to the EagleBucks account may be made by cash, check, or credit card at several campus locations including the Bursar's Office, Eagle Access Card Office (University Center near the USI Bookstore in UC132G, now under construction), and cash management centers (CMC). CMCs, similar to automated tellers, can accept cash for EagleBucks and will be installed at the University Center and Rice Library main floor.

Employees also may activate a Sodexho-Marriott dining account on the Eagle Access Card. See story in this issue of University Notes for more details.
