Rutgers University Camden campus administrator to become vice president for Business Affairs

The associate provost for Finance and Administration at Rutgers University, Camden (New Jersey) campus, has been named the vice president for Business Affairs at USI. Mark Rozewski has been associated with Rutgers since 1978, both on the main campus and at Camden, and has held positions of increasingly greater responsibility in planning, physical plant, budgeting, major capital project planning, finance, and administration. Rutgers University is a public research university with an international reputation for teaching, research, and service.

Rozewski will be the chief business and fiscal officer for USI. He will provide leadership to the University's administrative business offices and will work closely with Dr. Hoops and administrators to execute USI's mission.

Commenting on the move to USI, Rozewski said, "I'm struck by the collegiality, the optimism, and the campus growth at USI." He described USI as an engaging, lovely place that is so obviously enhanced by the community.

Dr. Hoops said, "Mark brings strong experience in fiscal management and campus master planning to this position, and we are certain he will be an asset to USI. Mark impressed the University community with his vision for leading the business affairs area in ways that will assist all units of the institution in reaching their goals."

At Rutgers Camden campus, Rozewski chaired the Self Study Committee and was author of the study in preparation of the accreditation visit; gave leadership for major new campus developments to support campus expansion and enrollment growth goals for $20 million in general campus construction, a $31 million law school, and the development of new student housing via a public-private partnership; and gave leadership to a broad-based effort to share support services like libraries, recreational and student health services, security, parking, facilities services, and debit cards, with two other colleges in the City of Camden to improve service to mutual constituencies and develop economies of scale for certain activities.

He holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Rutgers and has taken additional graduate work at Texas A & M University.

Rozewski is expected to arrive at USI in March. In the interim, Cynthia S. Brinker will serve as acting vice president for Business Affairs in addition to her duties as vice president of Governmental Relations.

Aakhush named associate dean of School of Liberal Arts

Michael Aakhush is already at home in his office in the Liberal Arts Center, where the new associate dean of the School of Liberal Arts is surrounded by art and artifacts from his decades of travel in Mexico and other locations.

Aakhush applied for and was chosen from several candidates for the position in mid-December. He said one of the motivating factors for his decision to apply was David Glassman, the new dean of the School Liberal Arts. "He's such a remarkable person," Aakhush said. "When I met him I thought, 'I can work with this person.'

Also, he said, "I've done an awful lot of work with committees over the years and that's prepared me for a leadership role in the school."

"Michael brings to the Office of the School of Liberal Arts strong administrative and service experience having in the past chaired the art department for five years, served on the University Curriculum Committee and Faculty Senate for six years respectively, and served on virtually every liberal arts and department-level committee that has existed," Glassman said. "Michael is known throughout the university community for his dedication to USI and his positive spirit to its mission...the School of Liberal Arts is extremely fortunate to have Michael join its administrative team."

Aakhush joined USI as a faculty member in the art department in 1977. He was promoted to associate professor in 1987 and professor in 1997.

He holds an M.F.A. in printmaking from Southern Illinois University-Edwardsville and a B.A. in art and art history from Bemidji State University. His wife, Patricia L. Aakhush, is an instructor in English.

He said he plans to continue his annual spring break Maya Art and Culture tour, which he has led since 1996, and will continue to teach a class on Ancient Art of Mexico and one printmaking course per year.

Economics adjunct's family "fortunate" by comparison in India

Kalyani Seetharaman, an adjunct faculty member in the Department of Economics and Finance, was born in the state of Tamilnadu, India, the coast of which was hard hit by the December 26 tsunami, and still has cousins, aunts, and uncles living there. Her mother and brother live hundreds of miles from the area most affected by the disaster, which has claimed more than 150,000 lives to date.

"My family is all doing fine," she said. "They said as far as they are concerned they are okay. When we look at so many other families, we feel fortunate."

Seetharaman spent most of her life in Canada and is a citizen of that country, but she visits Tamilnadu every year. "I was there last August but my husband and son were there in the end of November," she said.

In the midst of one of the biggest disasters in recent history, technology has allowed her to stay in touch with her family.

"One of my brothers and his wife are doctors, and we are able to keep in touch with them through cell phones and Web sites. The computer is so great."

She said her relatives in Tamilnadu are all living under one roof now "so they can keep a head count."

"They want to keep the family together because a lot of them are old, for the moral support, and so they know everyone is safe."
