"American Antiques and Hoosier Crafts" is a one of a series of noncredit courses being offered by the University of Southern Indiana at Historic New Harmony for the winter/spring program.

James Sanders, director of Historic New Harmony and an antique expert, will lead discussions on furniture, metalcrafts, glassware, samplers, coverlets, quilts, and lace to help participants distinguish between "antique" and "collectible." Lectures will be illustrated by objects from the extensive New Harmony collections.

The class will meet for six Monday evenings, starting March 21; the registration fee is $30. Call the USI Office of Continuing Education, (812) 464-1863, for information or to register.
