Openings still are available in the spring section of noncredit courses at the University of Southern Indiana, most of which get under way in February and again offer a variety of classes for special interests.

Classes in basic photography and beginning calligraphy start the week of February 5, along with conversational Arabic and beginning Chinese classes for those interested in expanding language capabilities. Conversational German classes start February 15.

There are beginning photography and phonics classes for pre-schoolers and phonics and math for parents, to help them work with their children, and an eight-week course which starts February 15 that will help stepparents sort out the myths and realities of their situations.

Aerobics, gymnastics, and swimming classes provide physical fitness enjoyment for all ages, starting the week of February 5.

Call the USI Office of Continuing Education, (812) 464-1863, for information or to register.
