PAMELA HOPSON NAMED DIRECTOR OF USI MULTICULTURAL CENTER

For Immediate Release
February 22, 1994

Pamela F. Hopson has been named the first director of the Multicultural Center now being established at the University of Southern Indiana.

A program of the Student Life department, the center will acquaint under-represented students -- minority groups such as black and international students who feel they have need of additional representation -- with various campus services for academic, cultural, and social growth.

The center also will initiate programs designed to enhance the integration of under-represented students into mainstream campus life and will build an awareness of the under-represented groups and the diversity they offer to the campus.

Hopson has been at USI for 15 years and has been assistant director of the Student Financial Assistance Office since 1985. She is a graduate of Indiana University and received a master's degree from Indiana State University.
