Several special interest courses in the spring section of University of Southern Indiana noncredit programs still have openings, ranging from golf or tennis through foreign language and exploring the evolution of the detective story.

The USI Office of Continuing Education offers a new course this spring, "The Case of the Enduring Detective: Private Eyes in American Fiction." The class will meet four Wednesdays, starting April 3, in USI's new Orr Center, and will be taught by Ron Roat, assistant professor of journalism and published detective story author; Robert Reid, professor of history; and Sandra Singer, professor of psychology. Other openings include:

More Conversational German - eight Wednesdays starting April 10, Evansville Day School.

Intermediate Calligraphy - six Thursdays starting April 11, Evansville Day School.

Beginning Golf (day classes only) - eight Tuesdays starting April 2, Wednesdays starting April 3, and Thursdays starting April 4, Helfrich Golf Course.

Beginning Tennis - five Tuesdays and Thursdays beginning April 2, USI Tennis Courts.

Call the USI Office of Continuing Education, 812/464-1989, for information or to register.
