Fourteen new AMIGOs have been selected to join 15 holdover AMIGOs in serving their peers and the University for the 1989-90 academic year at the University of Southern Indiana.

Many new students think that their first few days in college are some of the most memorable and exciting of their college careers. But for others, entering college can be a bewildering, uncomfortable, and even frightening experience. The University of Southern Indiana's orientation program provides new USI students with friends (AMIGOs) who can help reduce the confusion.

AMIGOs -- which stands for "Ask Me I Give Orientation" -- are generally upper class men and women with strong leadership ability and a desire to help others. AMIGOs guide new or prospective students around the USI campus, counsel them on how to prepare for college classes and tests, and serve as hosts at official USI events. Also, as their very name suggests, AMIGOs provide new USI students with a wise friend whose advice can mean the difference between a mediocre or outstanding college career. The 14 new AMIGOs include:
