USI Southern Hospitality Days welcome future Screaming Eagles

The University of Southern Indiana will be pulling out all the stops for prospective students and parents this fall during three Southern Hospitality Days, scheduled for September 26, October 17 and October 31.

"The name of the visit day really says it all—we try to provide our guests with Southern Hospitality so that they can experience the sense of community and collaboration that makes USI such a great institution," says Koryn Parsons, assistant director of undergraduate admissions.

Research shows that a personal visit is the most trusted source of information for prospective students, when choosing where to attend college. Attendees of Southern Hospitality Days will have numerous opportunities to ask questions during information fairs, academic sessions and guided campus and housing tours. Southern Hospitality Days offer a unique opportunity to see everything the University has to offer. "Guests will have the opportunity to hear from faculty within their academic areas of interests and tour facilities associated with that program," said Parsons.

Visitors can register online for any of the three hospitality days. There is no cost to register or to attend. Saturday visits are also available outside of the Southern Hospitality Days.
