

PBS president and CEO to address public at USI

Ms. Pat Mitchell, president and CEO of Public Broadcasting Service, will deliver a public address at 9 a.m. on Friday, December 8, in Kleymeyer Hall, Liberal Arts Center while in Evansville, meeting with WNIN board members and supporters. Her appearance at USI is sponsored by the School of Liberal Arts and the Scripps Howard Center for Media Studies.

Ms. Mitchell became the fifth president and chief executive officer of PBS in March 2000. In her new post, she directs the operations of the nation's largest and only non-commercial broadcasting service. She is the first woman and first producer to hold the position.

Ms. Mitchell came to PBS from Time Warner Corporation, where she was president of CNN Productions and Time Inc. Television.

Under Ms. Mitchell's leadership, her division produced 500 hours of acclaimed documentaries and specials for TBS and TNT, including A Century of Women; Moon Shot; Hank Aaron: Chasing the Dream; The Coming Plague; and Dying to Tell the Story, as well as National Geographic EXPLORER, Wild! Life Adventure specials, and other natural history and environmental programming.

Ms. Mitchell has worked for all three broadcast networks, as well as cable, serving as a news reporter, anchor, talk show host, producer, and executive. She was a correspondent for NBC's Today program, where she was also a substitute host for Jane Pauley. She was the arts correspondent for CBS's Sunday Morning and was a producer/reporter for ABC's Home show. For Group W television, Ms. Mitchell helped develop and launch several shows into national syndication, including Hour Magazine, which she also hosted.

Long active in community and nonprofit organizations, Ms. Mitchell serves on the advisory board of Radcliffe College's Schlesinger Library on the History of Women, and the Women's Leadership Advisory Council of the Kennedy School of Government at Harvard University. She also sits on the board of trustees of the Sundance Institute, the advisory board of the University of California at Santa Barbara's School of Communications, the Atlanta Metro YMCA, the High Museum in Atlanta, and the Atlanta Women's Foundation. She also is president of the board of Global Green USA, the American affiliate of Mikhail Gorbachev's worldwide environmental organization.

Ms. Mitchell is a magna cum laude graduate of the University of Georgia, with bachelor's and master's degrees in English.

Small Business Innovation Research workshop to be held

USI will co-host a Small Business Innovation Research (SBIR) workshop from 8:30 a.m. to noon, Thursday, December 14, in the University Center, room 201. Additional co-hosts include A Business Center for Developing Enterprise, the U.S. Small Business Administration Indianapolis District Office, and Indiana's Business Modernization and Technology Corporation, Metropolitan Evansville Chamber of Commerce, the Southwestern Indiana Small Business Development Center, and the Government Marketing Assistance Group.

The SBIR program is designed to provide up to $850,000 to help small, technology-oriented companies to develop new products and services. SBIR agencies provide $1.2 billion annually to companies that submit award-winning proposals.

The grants allow companies to pursue their product development ideas without taking on additional debt.

Interested persons include entrepreneurs, engineers, researchers, scientists, and economic development personnel. Companies with innovative ideas in the areas of computers, materials, engineering, the life sciences, electronics, and the physical sciences may benefit from this workshop as well.

Roy Kessinger, a businessman who benefited from SBIR, will be at the conference to tell how the program worked for his company, Visual Computing Systems.

The cost of the workshop is $20; $15 for those who register before December 8. For further information or to register, call 800/624-8315.

Helping faculty with technology focus of workshop

Information Technology Services (ITS) will sponsor "With a little help from my Friends...Implementing Information Technology into the Curriculum," a live teleconference workshop, from 1:30 p.m. to 3 p.m. on Thursday, December 7, in Mitchell Auditorium. The event is free and open to the public.

"ITS is hosting this because we would like to make faculty and staff aware of the trends in instructional technology and the types of services that we can provide them," said Dr. Saxon Reasons, instructional technology program manager.

The Public Broadcasting Service workshop will be led by Kenneth C. Green, a nationally recognized authority on the use of information technology in higher education. The founder and director of The Campus Computing Project, Green's annual survey on computer usage is highly regarded by campus officials and information technology industry leaders.

According to the 1999 Campus Computing Survey, helping faculty integrate information technology into the curriculum is the "single most important information technology issue" confronting colleges and universities across the country.

Green will present analysis of the 2000 Campus Computing Survey and discuss such topics as faculty concerns regarding the use of IT, including the lack of promotion and reward for involvement with new technologies, and campus policies affecting the control and ownership of course content and syllabi; why America's social, economic, and educational climates are ripe for distance education; and the challenge of information technology funding, including financial policy and infrastructure issues related to the state's role in higher education funding, among other topics.

For more information about the program or the speaker, visit the Web site www.pbs.org/als/programs/fiol0102.

Deliberative forum on biotechnology

A deliberative forum that will focus on issues relating to privacy and biotechnology will be held at 7:30 p.m. on Tuesday, December 5, in Mitchell Auditorium. Open to the public, the forum Biotechnology: Our Hope and Our Challenge is being sponsored by USI Honors Program students.

Topics of the deliberative forum will relate to ethical and social concerns about genetic discrimination and individual privacy and how government can and should ensure an individual's rights. Student concerns to be discussed are fear of the creation of an underclass and genetic discrimination in the workplace.

The purpose of a deliberative forum is to address complex issues in order to increase knowledge and organize potential knowledge or action. The forum will be organized by an honors student moderator who will direct the discussion. A convener and recorder will help in the organization and recording of the forum findings. Breakout groups will form following the open discussion for more group deliberation.

The December forum will be an introduction to a more in depth forum planned for the spring. The Enlow Policy Forum on Biotechnology will be held in New Harmony on Saturday, March 31.

Online University calendars

University calendars are now accessible on the USI Web site. University employees are encouraged to submit events regularly via the Internet. "In the past, one person in News and Information Services collected information from all across campus for the monthly calendar," said Ms. Jane Below, writer. "Because the University has grown so much that method is not thorough anymore. This way, as soon as an event is planned, someone in that department or office can submit it to the Web."

The USI Web site now contains eight calendars that will share appropriate information. Seven smaller calendars were designed for specific topics such as official University dates, arts and events, and lectures. These topic-specific calendars will share information with a larger comprehensive University calendar.

Every month, a report will be generated from the comprehensive University calendar. That report will be attached to University Notes and issued to area media.

To submit an event, click on News and Events from the University main page www.usi.edu. On the events page, click on calendar of events. At www.usi.edu/NEWSINFO/calendar/choice, users can choose to view a calendar or add an event. All events submitted will be reviewed for appropriate material and posted daily.

To begin submitting events, call Ms. Below at 464-1999 or e-mail jbelow@usi.edu for a password.
